The Anthropological Principle in the Economic Theory

This article considers the research of the role of Anthropology in basic model of the man in the economic theory. The anthropological method aims to distinguish historical factors in the forming of the man and his economic behavior. Results of the anthropological research prove that economics became to play leading role in the capitalist society, while exchange in the primitive economy appeared as a non-market gift. In conclusion, the author gives an interpretation of «anthropological revolution» in the economy.

Y.V. Sokolov

Classification of Methodological Directions in Economic Science

This is a comparison and contrast of competing schools of thought in Economic Research. The research represents a case of an emphasis on objective content versus the case of an emphasis on research methodology. The interrelationship between the basic schools of political economy also explored. The author discusses the implications for future research in economics.

Scientific and Industrial Cooperation in Entrepreneurial Networks

In the present world, powerful network organizations begin to play a greater role, due to significant synergy effect of cooperation. This paper deals with some aspects of Russian higher education and university science. Nowadays, there is a necessity of consolidation of university science and industry in networks in our country. It is no secret, that entrepreneurial networks may significantly reduce transaction costs, which usually emerge in the contracting process. In the paper, a system of indicators is represented, which gives an opportunity to estimate a compatibility of R&D area of the research university (which is going to become a member of the network) with the network enterprises activity.

Regional and Global in Interaction Between Civilisations

The article deals with controversial interrelation between globalization and regionalization. On the one hand, they could be perceived as complementary processes. On the other hand, large-scale formation of various regional trade-economic alliances during last decade tends to hamper the overall trade liberalisation within the framework of global economy. The author discusses several trends in both «institutional» and «functional» development of trade-economic alliances that might (at least partly) mitigate contradictions between globalization and regionalization.

Dividends and Profit: Logic of Correlation

Dividends are considered as one of the most important indicator of successful business activity. To some extent, dividend policy is regulated by corresponding federal legislation. According to the first draft of the law, the level of dividends was restricted from above by the level of net income for the reporting year. Currently, the law says about net income, i.e. it does not mention about reporting year. The logic of this change is discussed in the paper.

Impact of Income Inequality on the Rate of Economic Growth: an Approach to Modelling

A model of economic growth where subjective discount rates of consumers and the production function are formed endogenously is proposed. It is shown that the set of balanced growth equilibria is a continuum which can be parameterized by an index of inequality. Under some assumptions, the dependence of the balanced growth rate on this index has an inverted U-shaped form. Some empirical evidence supporting this form of dependence are provided.
